PECB
BEYOND RECOGNITION

THE VALUE OF PECBCERTIFICATION

The value and recognition of professional certification is constantly rising within the rapidly changing world. Thus, the decision of whether or not to get certified against a particular standard has further been simplified.

A large number of individuals have grown to understand and appreciate that best practices and methodologies for relevant fields really do exist, by applying their knowledge and skills into the goals of their company and therefore resulting as the key success factor of their organization.

Chances are that if a company is hiring an information security expert, risk manager, project manager or quality manager, the qualifications of the candidate are important to them. Hence, preference goes to the candidate who holds the relevant professional certification, whether it is an ISO/IEC 27001 Information Security certification, ISO 31000 Risk Manager certification, ISO 21500 Project Management certification or an ISO 9001 Quality Management certification.

However, professional certification is not just about gaining a certificate that proves the completion of a course; rather it serves as proof of recognition for practice knowledge and professional development throughout one's experience. From comprehensive training to rigorous examination procedures, one will become a certified professional with respect to their practical experience.

A considerable amount of research has proven that individuals who hold professional certifications have increased earnings and higher career potentials. In addition to pointing their career forward, an individual's motivation rises since they unite with a recognized and prospering community and trust that they have what it takes to succeed in difficult work situations.
